Emerald 2009/10 mid December pool update

Emerald Group Australia (Emerald) today announced steady estimated pool returns (EPR) for its 2009/10 Northern Quality WheatPool (NQWP).

Global wheat markets have remained static over recent weeks with everyone remaining comfortable with the more than sufficient global supply of new season wheat. As noted previously, the 2009/10 global wheat production levels rebounded so with most export nations holding considerable stocks supply has comfortably outweighed demand. Consequently, export demand for Australian wheat remains steady in the face of strong competition from other exporters with this reflected by a lack of buyers for nearby shipments relative to last year.

In terms of pricing, Australia is facing competition from other quality exporters such as France and Germany as well as US white wheat which after quality differences are taken into account are all currently cheaper than Australian wheat. There is however still demand for Australian wheat from premium south east Asian, Middle East and African markets. As this season's wheat quality becomes more widely known, export enquiries are also increasing. Domestic wheat values have held steady despite the falls in CBOT with the Australian dollar hovering around US$0.90 providing support to Australian flat price levels.

We expect demand for Australian wheat to increase in the new year however to lift prices substantially there will need to be fresh global demand and a supply shock of some kind. We remain hopeful that fresh demand may emerge from the sub continent, and the northern hemisphere's new season crops find conditions tougher than the last two years. Both of these potential events would be some way off and hence we expect wheat prices in the next month to trade within the same boundaries that we have recently witnessed.
